Ambassador Melanne Verveer was nominated by President Obama in 2009 to be the first U.S. Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women’s Issues. In that capacity, she worked with Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to coordinate foreign policy issues and activities relating to the political, economic, and social advancement of women. Traveling to nearly sixty countries, she led efforts to integrate women’s rights and participation into U.S. foreign policy. President Obama also appointed Ambassador Verveer to serve as U.S. Representative to the UN Commission on the Status of Women.

Today she is the Director of Georgetown University’s Institute for Women, Peace and Security. The Institute seeks to enhance national and global security by documenting the crucial role women play in peace-building and security through research and scholarship and by engaging global leaders from government, civil society and the private sector in conversations on the urgent issues of our time. She also serves as Special Representative on Gender Equality for the OSCE Chairmanship.

Ambassador Verveer is the founding partner of Seneca Point Global (SPG), a global women's strategy firm.
